At a meeting of the National Council of the National Front held in Berlin on 21 February 1954, Lothar Bolz suggested strongly that the German youth organizations hold the largest demonstrations carried out thus far when Adenauer attempts to get the conscription law passed by the West German parliament. The Junge Christen, the Falken, the FDJ, the Pfadfinder, and members of the trade unions are to join in protesting any attempt to pass this bill. Blitz protest meetings are to be held in and in front of factories. Leaflets are to be distributed and delegations are to be sent to the Bundestag. Members of East German youth organizations are to mount a letter campaign, pay visits to West German youth organizations, invite West German youths to visit them, and take advantage of every opportunity to bring about cooperation between the youth in East and West Germany in the question of solving peacefully the German question. The 1954 Deutschlandtreffen must be a manifestation of the desire of the German youth for peace, freedom, and unity: it must show the Western powers what the position of the German youth is, namely that EDC and the presence of Western occupation troops is unacceptable.
